David A. King named new Marshall Center Director

David A. King will succeed Art Stephenson as director of the Marshall Center when Stephenson leaves to take an education position within the Agency on June 15. NASA Administrator Sean O'Keefe and NASA Associate Administrator for Space Flight Bill Readdy made the announcement during an All-Hands meeting at Marshall on Friday. King, whose NASA career began in 1983, has been deputy director at Marshall since November. Before coming to Marshall he was director of Shuttle Processing at Kennedy Space Center in Florida. "Dave's closeness to the people and programs at Marshall make him a natural selection," Readdy said.
